Review of “Catch me if you can”

“Catch me if you can” follows the true story of a con man Frank William Abagnale, who stole millions of dollars in his teen years. This movie depicts the cat and mouse chase between detective Carl Hanratty and our protagonist Frank. Director Steven Spielberg made a masterpiece that couldn’t bore me even for a minute. Even Frank Abagnale himself believed Spielberg was the only filmmaker who “could do this film justice”.

The casting of Leonardo DiCaprio as Frank and Tom Hanks as Carl Hanratty proves this exact point. Leonardo DiCaprio perfectly portrayed the character of a con man who’s every action will marvel you. He was a genius who could turn any incident to his advantage. He was an extremely cautious person through and through.

To quote “An honest man has nothing to fear, so I’m trying my best not to be afraid.”
– Frank Abagnale.

I enjoyed every moment of DiCaprio on screen. Both of the key characters were brought into life by two amazing actors. Tom Hanks was the perfect person to fill the shoes of Carl Hanratty. Frank’s intelligent conmanship made me chuckle; Carl’s determination made me lean forward. Every supporting character on its role was masterfully presented. Familial issues, every scam, every interaction made the buildup of the movie more and more interesting as the story progressed. DiCaprio’s Frank Abagnale left me in awe much like the people he scammed.

This movie is good enough to attract people of any age. My personal rating for this movie would be 9/10.
