Train to Busan Review

"Train to Busan" is a Korean Movie released on 13th May, 2016. Train to Busan is a thriller horror movie. This is basically a zombie movie with full of twist. A virus spreads out from a pig and after being attacked by an infected human others also became zombies.

Gong Yoo as Fund manager Seok-woo is a workaholic and divorced father of his daughter Su-an, is the main character of this movie and he is also my favorite character. His character just expresses a typical responsible father of our society who is misunderstood by his family. The movie goes forward with the struggle of some passengers of the train to survive the train journey from zombies centered on Seok-woo and his daughter. There are also some characters like Seong-kyeong as Sang-hwa's pregnant wife, Yoon Sang-hwa as husband of Seong-kyeong, Min Yong-guk as a high school baseball player, Yon-suk as a business executive, Han Seong-soo as the KTX train Team Leader are some important side character who depicted it into realistic. Some parts of this movie show really well that unity is strength and selfishness leads you to destruction. My favorite scene of this movie is the scene where they found out the weakness of zombies which was a very tensed scene. The movie is full of twist and I couldn't take my eyes off for a second.

The only thing I wasn't too pleased with was the ending. The ending seemed very sad to me although this kind of ending made this movie unique.

I liked this movie very much. I feel this movie is well directed and graphics, screenplay was up to the mark. Actors were also really good at their characters. Those who loves thrillers and zombie flicks, will find it very interesting.

My rating for the movie is 4.5 out of 5.
